

Regional Economic Impacts of Proposed Health and Human Services Cuts

This brief was funded by a grant from The California Endowment.

In “The Economic Consequences of Proposed California Budget Cuts,”¹ we estimated the statewide economic impact of Governor Schwarzenegger’s proposed fiscal year (FY) 2010–2011 budget using IMPLAN 3.0, an industry-standard input-output modeling software package. We found that the proposed cuts to major health and human services programs would have the greatest impact on job loss and state and local tax revenue reduction, compared to other budget solutions. In this brief, we report the economic impact by region using a similar methodology.

Table 1. Economic Impact of Major Health and Human Services Spending Cuts, FY 10–11

Methodology/Sources

Our methodology is described in detail in “The Economic Consequences of Proposed California Budget Cuts.” The proposed spending cuts were allocated by region based on current program spending or utilization by county. CalWORKS, IHSS, Healthy Families and SSI cuts were allocated based on California Budget Project estimates of the budget impact.³ Child care cuts were allocated based on the percentage of children served in non-CalWORKs child care programs, based on data provided by the California Child Care Resource and Referral Network. Medi-Cal cuts were allocated based on California Department of Health Care Services Medi-Cal enrollment data.⁴ Mental health cuts were allocated based on California Department of Mental Health client data.⁵ Food stamp cuts were allocated based on the value of state-only benefit issuances according to the California Department of Social Services.⁶
